Greetings,

Storm Runners provides a roller-coaster of feelings much like the actual hurricane found in the storyline. It has an interesting and important blend of contemporary issues molded together through a father and son who just happen to seek out storms for profit. Storm Runners is a quick read that got me to thinking about the state tests our students have to endure and the new Common Core Standards. This unit attempts to tie these two together, NOT teaching to the test but teaching to the format of the test. The unit also helps students understand that they can use a series of simple activities before they answer the “test” questions and therefore better prepare themselves for success.

For those of you who know my other units, it is important to note that this unit is very different. It is relatively short and there is no Appendix. It meets all of the ELA Common Core Standards for seventh and eighth grade even persuasion standards. Answer Keys for the multiple choice questions and the vocabulary terms are at the end of the unit, otherwise there are no “teacher guide” like answers. It is important for you to read the novel and work through each of the assignments on your own, as if you were a student in your class. This will allow you to anticipate at least some of the questions and problems your students may have. It is my strong suggestion that you work through the multiple choice questions as well before you use the answer key (I have no doubt that we will differ in some of our answers, just as we would on the “test”.) Finally, have some fun for yourself and complete the writing assignments.

The Storm Runners unit consists of four sections:

Informational Text Connections - Students will use three different note-taking strategies as they study the natural disaster of their choice and then perform a Public Service Announcement using their information. My suggestion to you is to cover any and all of your bulletin boards with maps of the U.S. and then track different natural disasters through the Weather Channel or other media sources. There are numerous online sites that track natural disasters. Use the guide words, tracking natural disasters when looking for information.

Vocabulary Connections - The vocabulary is very different as it is not vocabulary from the text but will present not only foundational English Language Arts’ terms but testing terms as well. Too many times our students do not understand what they are being asked in “high-stakes” test because of the “testing” vocabulary, question types, and poor questions. The word “significant” and “passage” are used extensively in testing, but how many of us use these words in the oral or written questions? Alongside is the concept of inferential thought. Do students really know what is being asked of them when they have to conclude, interpret, determine, or infer? In addition, students seem to be totally confused and frustrated when a test asks them to think like the author. For example, “What does the author imply…?” It wasn’t too long ago that my students would just quit when they got to this point in the assignment or test. The bottom line is that the content of the test is a mystery to students who cannot wade through the format and vocabulary. If we do not address this need our students will continually score lower than we know they can perform.

Literary Connections - Students will examine, answer, and write their own literal and inferential questions using the novel. Initially students will answer a series of questions without preparation assignments. Please note that the questions and choices in the multiple choice section are not necessarily good questions or even good choices; they are an accurate depiction of most “high stakes” tests. Take time to truly analyze them for yourself. Next they will identify the questions’ type and analyze the novel using the elements of literature. With this little extra effort they will improve their understanding and score. Purposeful journaling is also a part of this section asking students to connect the novel to themselves, other texts, and to the world.

Writing Connections – In addition to the writing completed for the Public Service Announcement script, students will write themselves into Storm Runners story adding a subchapter with an extra “time and date”. They will also create the first page of the sequel, The Surge.

In the past two years, I have seen significant gains in my students’ abilities to not only complete the standardized test but feel good about the testing experience and the results. On the first day of testing, while taking a final stretch, one of my students shouted, “I am going to “kill” this, Mrs. Sprague; bring it on!” Her enthusiasm was not an exception but the norm of the entire grade level. Students MUST feel this way if they are to succeed on the “test” but more importantly in life! The evidence is consistent with their attitude as the reading scores just came in: over 30% of my students in the Exceeds section and 0% in the Fall Far Below section of the Reading Test. (Yes, I have a variety of special needs students and last years results were very similar).

The unit time frame is two to four weeks depending on the learning experiences you choose; however the vocabulary should be an ongoing learning experience throughout a quarter or even semester. As the Common Core Standards gain ground we must tie literature to informational text and this novel is a natural.

I know your students will enjoy Storm Runners and it is my hope that through this unit taking the “high-stakes” test will be demystified for your students and they will know that they can “kill it” as well.

Please let me know your thoughts. I love to hear from students as well.

Natural Disasters

Hurricanes, tsunamis, earthquakes, blizzards, and drought are all natural disasters that can destroy and kill. It is important to understand their origin, the precautions humans can take, how they are tracked by experts, and their destructive effects.

Think about which type of natural disaster you are most interested in; will you choose the one that most effects your geographical region or one that would most like never touch your life personally. Which information do you think would be the most helpful, interesting? Once you have made the decision, begin collecting information through both printed text and online articles. Skim through several articles (7-9) zeroing in on the ones that have the most current, interesting and important information. You must review a variety of articles; ultimately, you will only be using three.

Record each of your sources here using the URL or title, author, and publisher; include the date for each.

1. ________________________________________________________________
2. ________________________________________________________________
3. ________________________________________________________________
4. ________________________________________________________________
5. ________________________________________________________________
6. ________________________________________________________________
7. ________________________________________________________________
8. ________________________________________________________________
9. ________________________________________________________________

Use each of the three methods for collecting information about the natural disaster: Research: 7 Minutes at a Time, Heavenly Highlighting & Marginal Recordings, and Combination Notes.
RESEARCH: 7 MINUTES AT A TIME!

PROCEDURES

A. Preparation for Reading

1. Find a relatively short article (online or in print) about your topic. No more than two pages long. Skim title, pictures, captions, graphics, headings, etc for clues to what the article will tell you.
2. Fold a large piece of paper (11x17) in 2x3 squares and then open it up OR accordion fold a piece of lined notebook paper OR Use index cards OR Whatever method of recording works for you.
3. Think about what types of information you are looking for. Write out five to eight questions you have about the topic.

B. Reading the Information.

1. Choose a small section of the text you can read in about 3 minutes. Read for 3 minutes. Try to summarize and look for key vocabulary and facts while you read, think about how each fact or term answers the question or connects to the topic before you read more. What is important or interesting? If you finish the short section, do not go on to the next section. Instead, re-read the same section. Turn over the article if it is in print or turn off the screen if you are online.
2. For 2 minutes, write out in short phrases (no sentences) facts you remember that are important or interesting. Those facts that answer your questions. Try to remember as much as possible but don’t get frustrated if you forget a specific name, date, etc.
3. For the last 2 minutes use the text again and check back over for any information you might have missed. This is also the time to check for those names, dates, titles, and even spelling.
4. Repeat Steps 1-3
5. Take a 7 minute break to look over facts. Which facts answer the questions you have or which ones form new questions you might want to have answered. Highlight facts that are especially important and/or interesting. Put a / mark through any facts you think are probably extra and will not use.

C. After Reading

Stretch, reread your original questions and get ready for two more sessions or as many as you have time for. You will be able to complete a great deal of true research in a short time. Minutes are flexible (you can use 8, to 10 minutes stretching out the time to read and/or write, but time will fly if you stick with seven minutes.
Heavenly Highlighting and Marginal Recordings

Procedures:

Before reading
1. Skim information, look over the:
   - headings
   - pictures
   - captions
   - charts
   - graphs
   - maps

During reading
2. Highlight:
   - before and after an unfamiliar vocabulary word
   - key phrases
   - important dates and/or places
   - people’s names
   - quotes
   - statistics – other numbers
   - headings
   - style elements: similes, metaphors, hyperbole, bias, personification, alliteration, flashback, foreshadowing, sarcasm

3. Record in the margin:
   - questions you still have after reading
   - quiz questions you create using the information.
   - interesting or important information in bullets
   - any items in a sequence or list (write out using numbers)

After reading
Review the highlighted information and compare to the information you placed in the margins. Use a different colored highlighter to record any information that overlaps.
Choose one page of an article or online text to read. Skim for headings, graphics, etc. Record important and interesting information using written bullets and visuals. Finally, write a summary of the information in the box below, don’t forget the topic sentence.

Notes (bullets):

Symbols, Pictures, or Graphics:

Summary:
Public Service Announcement

A Public Service Announcement (PSA) is a short and passionate speech or skit about an important topic.

Take the natural disaster information you have recorded and create a Public Service Announcement with a small group, pair, or on your own.

PSA Steps to Success

Step One: Determine the most interesting and important facts from your research.

Step Two: Write the script

Step Three: Assign roles, read through script

Step Four: Revise script as needed

Step Five: Create background, and a visual that includes additional information. Also, consider what each of the speakers will wear during the PSA (music can be used as well)

Step Six: Practice at least five to six times

Step Seven: Ask three adults and two other groups to score you using the rubric below

Step Eight: Revise and edit after feedback

Step Nine: Practice two more times

Step Ten: Videotape PSA

Below are the requirements for an effective PSA.
Public Service Announcements Expectations

CONTENT
• message of the PSA presents important and interesting information
• accurate use of natural disaster facts
• researched notes are used in a focused and complete way

VISUAL
• adds additional information to the script
• colors balance with actors clothing and background
• organized and neat
• easy to be seen from long distances

PERFORMANCE
• dialogue supports the message
• audience could easily see and hear the PSA
• actors know their roles and do not rely upon written scripts or notes
• PSA is between 60 - 90 seconds in length
• If background music is used it must be school appropriate and soft

GROUP DYNAMICS
• team did not require redirection
• team stays on task during process
• team supports each other
• all students have important roles.

Suggestions/comments/praise:
Mastering Test and Literary Vocabulary

The word “vocabulary” strikes fear in the heart of most students. Adding a variety of words to your own written and spoken vocabulary should bring you hope; it could even bring you success if you can harness them. Read these quotes about words.

“Words are potent weapons for all causes, good or bad.” Manly Hall

“To me, the greatest pleasure of writing is not what it’s about, but the music the words make.” Truman Capote

“For me, words are a form of action, capable of influencing change. Their articulation represents a complete, lived experience.” Ingrid Bengis

“By words we learn thoughts, and by thoughts we learn life.” Jean Baptiste Girard

“The language we use to communicate with one another is like a knife. In the hands of a careful and skilled surgeon, a knife can work to do great good. But in the hands of a careless or ignorant person, a knife can cause great harm; exactly as it is with our words.” Unknown

“Words are the keys to the heart.” Chinese proverb

Learning terms and phrases is one of the keys to becoming successful in language arts and life. Many times you may not even know what you are being asked on a test or quiz because you don’t know the vocabulary used. Certainly, there are times when you are confused when someone is speaking and/or asking a question; we all experience this. In order, to feel more confident and more successful, it is necessary for you to master each of the following words on the vocabulary lists below.

This is NOT a weekly spelling test or quiz where you memorize the answers and then forget them. You will work on only a few words each week adding a few more a week at a time. Over the course of the next nine weeks you will have mastered each word and put them into your “working vocabulary”. This means that you will be able to truly recognize and use the word.
Getting Started:
Which words do you already know? Which words will you learn?

1. Review each of the lists and record any definition, synonym, example, and/or picture that would represent the vocabulary term.

2. Compare your answers to the Key. Negotiate with your teacher if you think your answers are close to the answers on the key.

3. Write out a new list (combine both the ELA and Testing lists) for yourself based on the words you need to learn and remember.

4. Turn your list in to the teacher for review.

5. Using the key write out the definitions that you will learn and memorize.

6. Separate the list into eight weeks. If you have a total of 40 words then you will be learning five words a week. If you have 30 words to learn you will be learning about 4 words a week.

7. The first week you will take a quiz with only your first set of words, Week Two you will take a quiz with your next set AND the first set; Week Three you will take a quiz with the first three sets, and so on. You will have two opportunities to show you can use all of the words in Weeks Eight and Nine. If you can discipline yourself to truly learn the small amount of words each week you WILL learn all the words in the nine weeks time frame!!
Learning Activities

Try these activities to help you learn your words. Ask others what they use to memorize as well. No matter what else you choose, the first task is to write out all words and definitions on note cards.

A. Create a riddle for each of your words.
   Examples:
   I combine facts and decisions.
   drawing conclusions
   I make poetry lines sound sweet; I am used in advertising as well.
   alliteration
   I like to shorten the central topic of any text
   main idea
   I’m what it’s all about and why it’s written writing purpose
   I’m so popular everybody talks about me
   according to...

B. Use your words in a sentence with a prepositional phrase.
   Examples:
   After the party my mom and I create a dialogue, texting.
   I summarized that the girl on the bike was an athlete.

C. Create a word puzzle (any type) with your words.

D. Use your words in a complex sentence.
   Examples:
   As my brother erupted into the room, I saw a significant change in my mom’s face.
   The genre of a book is important to me because I don’t like romance or horror.

E. Total Exposure
   Create a second set of note cards and place them throughout your house. Test yourself every time you see a card. This is a good way for your family to help you as well.

F. Create your own Matching Quiz and then take the quiz.

Literary Connections

Text to Self; Text to Text; Text to World

Reading any novel can be more exciting and you will remember more if you connect it to your own life, text to self; other stories or articles, text to text; or to life around you, text to world. As you read through the novel, journal how Storm Runners connects to each. You don’t have to finish the prompts but use them as a guide. Remember to explain the connections and include page and paragraphs numbers.

Examining and Analyzing Question Types

It is a fact that if you better understand the type of question you are being asked you can better understand how to answer. Read on about two question types.

Literal Questions
Nickname: Right There Questions because you can find their answers “right there” in the text.
- a general question that directs you back to the text
- an introductory or exploratory question related to a topic that is easy for you to locate in the text

Examples:
How many bears are there in the story of Goldilocks?
What do the bears eat for breakfast?
Whose bed is “just right”?

Inferential Questions are:
Nickname: Think Questions because you must reread and think about the text.
- a question about specific content, theme, or main idea
- an inquiry that challenges to examine a central position
- a request to interpret or explore a passage in the text
- a "how...?" or "why...?" question
- a challenge to compare and contrast characters, motivations, descriptions, tones, theme, etc.
- an examination of vocabulary or interesting phrases

Example:
How many crimes did Goldilocks commit?
Why did Goldilocks always like baby bear’s things?
What does “just right” mean?

Activity
1. Review and analyze all of the questions in Round One: Which questions are literal and which ones are inferential?
2. With a pencil, record an L or I next to the number of the question.
3. Combine efforts with a partner and compare and contrast answers.
4. With a pen, record the final decision over the penciled answer.
5. Be prepared to share in the whole group discussion.
6. After whole group discussion, go back to pages 15-18, Literal and Inferential Questions Round One: and change answers as needed.
Sequence and Summarize

1. Read pages 44-77.
2. Outside of the ladder, list the important events in short phrases, like titles.
3. Decide if any of the events should be combined or dropped.
4. Place numbers, one – eight, next to the events in chronological order. You may add no more than two rungs to the ladder.
5. Write the events using the short phrases on the ladder in chronological order.
6. Use the events to write a summary of this section.
Characterization Connections

Sometimes the best way to remember story characters and their characteristics is to compare them to people we personally know or people in a favorite or well-known movie, TV show, or song. In this way the characters become more real and more memorable; this helps your comprehension, which will in turn help you answer the “test” questions.

Read pages 78-109.

Record the name of a person that has a connection to the Storm Runners characters and explain the connection using details. Use another sheet of paper if needed.

Chase Masters reminds me of _______________________________________ because ________________________________________________

Tomás reminds me of ______________________ because ______________________________________________________________

John Masters reminds me of _______________________________________ because ________________________________________________

Momma Rossi reminds me of _______________________________________ because ________________________________________________

Nicole Rossi reminds me of _______________________________________ because ________________________________________________

Rashawn reminds me of _______________________________________ because ________________________________________________

Cindy reminds me of _______________________________________ because ________________________________________________

Richard Krupp reminds me of _______________________________________ because ________________________________________________ Literal and Inferential Questions: Round Two  Read pages 44-109.

Before you answer, underline any vocabulary words you find in the question or answer choices and review your Vocabulary Answer Key. Also, record the question type next to the number and review your sequencing and characterization assignments.

Literal and Inferential Questions: Round Three

Another important way to understand what you are being asked is to create your own questions. In this way, you will understand how questions are formed and how a.b.c. choices are created.

A. Type or write (on a separate sheet) your own multiple questions (with or without a partner) including the three choices: a, b, c (you may not use “none of the above” or “all of the above” as a choice). Use the questions in Rounds One and Two above to help you create the questions.

Include:
- six literal questions
- ten inferential questions
- answer key

Hint: Keep your vocabulary answers (either card or paper list) and Round One and Two questions near you for help.

B. After you finish your questions:
1. Mix up the questions and rewrite or revise for a final copy using the same format as the Round One and Two questions.
2. Switch questions with a partner or team
3. Each partner or team needs to identify question types. Write L or I next to each number.
4. Each partner or team answers them on a separate sheet of paper.
5. Each partner or team grades the switched work and returns it to the original partner or team.

Brainstorm some questions here with your partner or team.
Writing Connections

What Would You Do?

Now that you have finished the story and you really understand the style of the text, write a Storm Runners’ subchapter adding yourself to the story. Remember that you need to maintain the original style by writing in third person and you must maintain the original plot. Chase can’t be killed and the hurricane must hit.

Before you begin writing the subchapter, answer these questions on a separate piece of paper or in a journal:

- How long will your subchapter be?
- Where will you enter the story, What time heading?
- What version of yourself will you like to be? The age you are now? Ten years older? Fifty years older?
- Which characters will you interact with?
- What types of literary devices will you use?
- How will the reader get to know your characteristics? Show or Tell?
- Why are you in the story? Will you create more conflict or help Chase solve the one he already has?
- Do you enter the story alone or does someone come with you? (no more than one additional person besides yourself?)
- How will you exit the story?
The Surge: Page One

The next book in the Storm Runners series is The Surge. Before you read this sequel write out your version of the first page. Use nor more than two more sheets of paper if needed.
